

September 2008

The ever stoical members of HEC arrived at their allotted time and place as part of the Chard International Festival of Culture and Activity. They came armed with footballs, cakes and bicycles, but alas this time, the British summer weather got the better of them. The plan had been to organise members of the public in games of football and chat about home ed. Unfortunately the rain kept people away and they only managed to swap stickers with the local cycle club and eat the cakes!

August 2008

Despite dodgy weather being forecast, 6 families attended the picnic at Charmouth. As it turned out the weather was fine and the fact that there was a distinct lack of swimming costumes did not deter the children from spending most of the afternoon playing in the sea. Rock castles as well as sand castles were made, games of badminton and football were played. And as always, with trips to the beach, lots of people left with special stones, shells, driftwood and seaweed to add to their already growing collections at home.
